

Hence,

$$f'(z) = \frac{1}{2\pi i} \int_k \frac{\varphi(\zeta)}{(\zeta - z)^2} d\zeta.$$

$$\frac{f(z_n) - f(z)}{z_n - z} = \frac{1}{2\pi i} \int_k$$

of: For fixed z in \mathfrak{G} it must be shown (cf. §6, II, or m) that

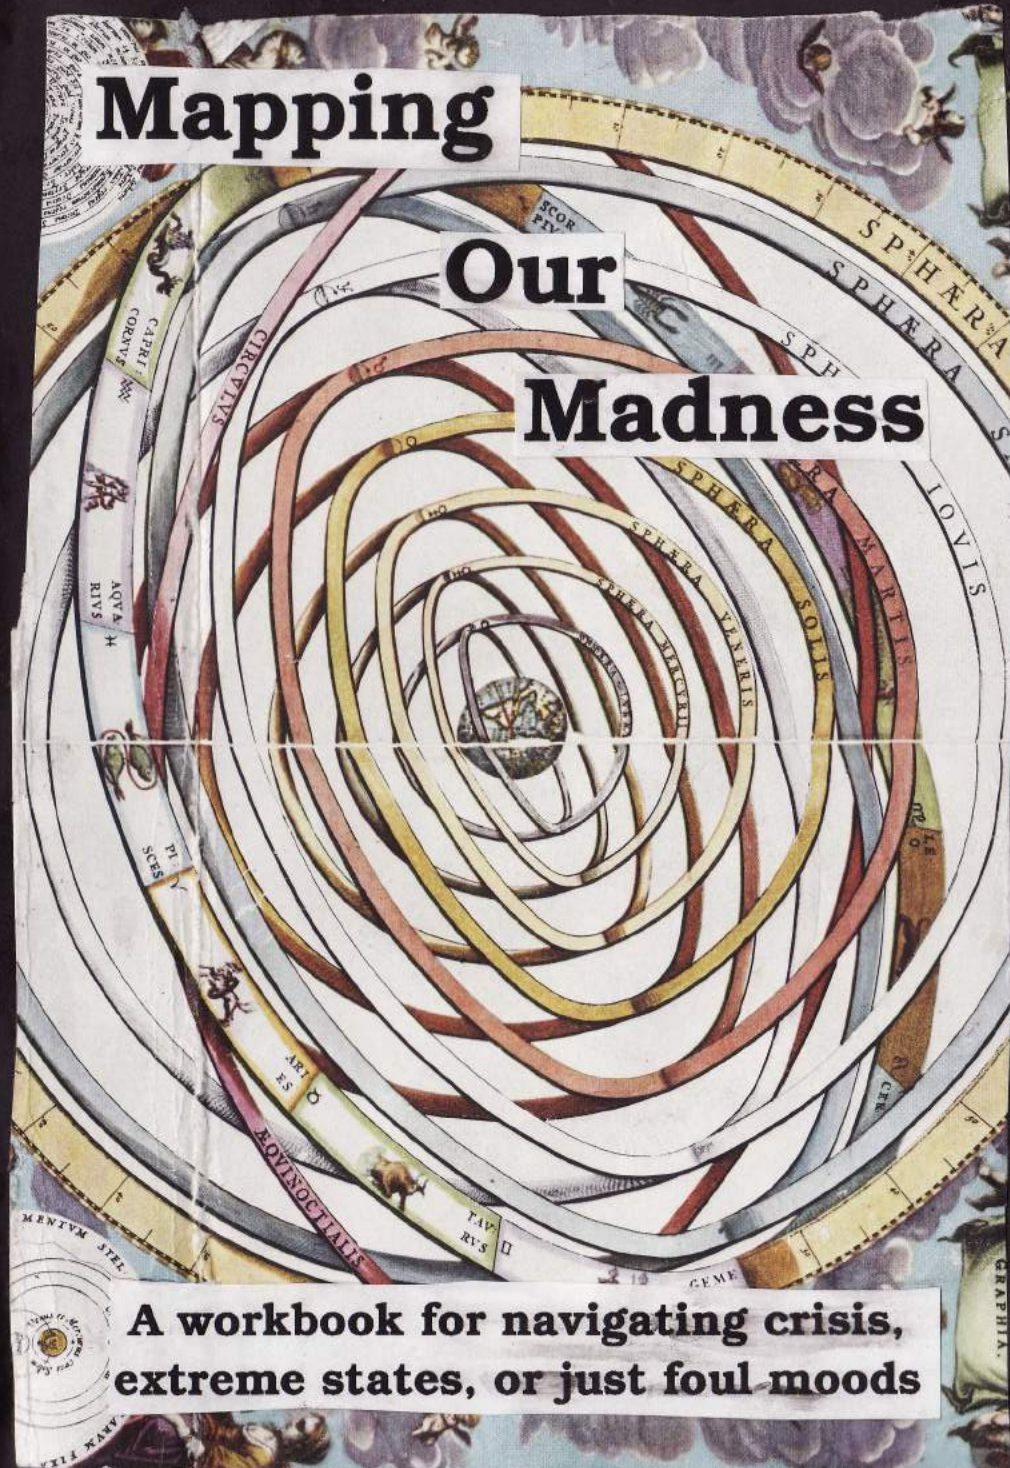

1

Mapping

Our

Madness

A workbook for navigating crisis, extreme states, or just foul moods

Intro

Hey there. This is a workbook zine I made for the purpose of helping folks map, plan, and navigate crisis, madness, or just foul moods. The idea basically, is that this is a toolbox to keep near you, so in the event that you're in a crisis situation or experiencing some intense emotions, you'll have some of the tools that you (or the folks around you) need to help you take care of yourself. I know for me, in the moment, when I'm experiencing intense emotional states it's hard for me to think about what I need, much less be able to communicate that to the folks around me. The point of this workbook is to help you make a plan, in case things get real; to help facilitate that communication of needs, and also hopefully to prevent those crisis situations from happening in the first place.

I know this format doesn't work for everyone and realize that maybe not all of the pages in here are relevant to you. I encourage anyone who uses this to alter it in any way that makes sense to them, or in the very least, I hope it inspires them to make something else great for themselves.

Some notes about the motivations for making this workbook: The ways we experience our mental health, the ways we experience ourselves and our realities, are inextricably entangled with the world around us. In other words, it doesn't make sense for us to divorce ourselves from what surrounds us (the systems that connect us, or pit us against each other: that tell us how to be, or coerce us into submission), to isolate the ways we feel and then label ourselves as "sick." It's difficult to understand the ways we experience our mental health without also acknowledging the ways we are affected by the forces of systemic oppression (racism, sexism, homophobia, classism, etc.) that are imposed on us. Put simply, perhaps we are not so "crazy" for being affected by a world that is so fucked up.

Envelope

Glue an envelope here to keep things that make you smile. Letters from friends, pictures, comics cds, ect.

Resources

- The Icarus Project- Hella resources (zine, forums, etc.) here: "The Icarus Project is a radical mental health support network, online community, and alternative media project by and for people struggling with extreme emotional distress that often gets labeled as mental illness." www.theicarusproject.net
- Learning to Love You More- "Assignments" or activities to keep you busy and loving yourself. www.learningtoloveyoumore.net
- SuperBetter- Created by game designers to build personal resilience (the ability to stay strong, optimistic, and curious in the face of difficult challenges) by harnessing the power of positive emotion and social connection. www.superbetter.com
- Warmline- A warmline is an alternative to a crisis line, peer-run by people in recovery themselves. www.warmline.org
- Hearing Voices Network- The Hearing Voices Networks offers resources (information and forums) for folks who experience voice hearing, visions, tactile sensations and other sensory experiences. HVN does not approach these experiences from a medical or pathological framework. www.hearing-voices.org
- Mad in America- A journalistic website "designed to serve as a resource and a community for those interested in rethinking psychiatric care in the United States and abroad." They have good resources for those seeking alternative mental health practitioners or for information and studies on psychopharmaceuticals www.madinamerica.com

It's important to challenge the idea that these differing experiences are "wrong" and that we are "sick" or "broken" for having them. That we are something that needs correcting and must undergo treatment in order to be "fixed" Rather, these experiences can be seen as gifts. Like superpowers to be held close to our hearts, to understand and to know their limits so that we may use them as tools to liberate ourselves and to build better worlds.

This is an effort in hopes of imagining a world where the different ways our minds and bodies may function are recognized and supported as valid experiences. Where we have the time and the space to look into ourselves and uncover our identities without fear of being dismissed or denied for what we come up with. This is an effort in hopes of supporting a radical re-envisioning of mutual support within our communities.

This zine was made with love by one weirdo who sometimes feels too much, for all the great minds she has (and hasn't) met. For tinkerers and poets, for brains with engines that are prone to over-heating, for those who hear and see what others can't, for dimly lit and sunken hearts, and for those whose light can become so bright, it's blinding. You are not alone. This is for you; I made this for you.

You're stronger than they can ever imagine,
Momo

You know yourself best, but I have few suggestions for filling this out. You can take them or leave them:

-Fill it out when you're in a good mood (whatever that means for you.) I know that sometimes, when you're feeling good, it's hard to think about the possibility of crisis or feeling bad again and it's easier to just stay feeling good than it is to plan ahead in case you don't feel so good sometime in the future.

-Leave space for more. There's a lot to think about it here and you'll be constantly growing and learning more about yourself and finding more tools that help you. I'll leave some blank pages in the back too so you can make your own pages.

-Some of these things can be hard to think about or write down. And maybe some of these things you haven't thought much about before. Try filling some of this out with a close friend. Put your brains together to envision mutual support! This doesn't mean that it's a bad idea to spend some time working on this alone

(On some pages, there may be more specific suggestions in parentheses but those are just suggestions or prompts to get you thinking.)

(A blank page for you to fill in. This could be spill-over from another page, or something completely different)

A large section of the page consisting of approximately 25 horizontal lines, intended for writing or drawing.

Daily Things to Take Care of Myself

(this can be things like exercising daily, to tinctures, herbal supplements, vitamins, and medications that you may want to take regularly)

(A blank page for you to fill in. This could be spill-over from another page, or something completely different)

Easy Food a Friend or I could Make

(This can include recipes and favorite foods you're more likely to eat if you're having a hard time eating. It can also include dietary preferences, restrictions or allergies)

People I'd can Talk to, or would like to Be Around

(This can include names and contact information. You may wan to check in with these people before filling this out, as well as regularly, to make sure they are able and willing to support you)

Spaces I feel Safe/Safer in

(You can include addresses, maps, or directions you think it will help you or friends get you to one of these places)

Lined writing area for page 11.

Things that make me Laugh

(this could be anything! Books, movies, comics, pictures, people, silly Internet videos, etc.)

Lined writing area for page 12.